the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of people aged 65 and over is expected to increase from 200 million to 400 million. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations, 1994). The United Nations also predicts that the number of people in the world who are 65 years of age and older will increase by 1.5 billion in the next 20 years (United Nations, 1994). The rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age and the rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are 65 years of age and older are two of the most significant demographic trends in the world today. These trends have important implications for the world's labor force and for the world's economy. The rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age will lead to a rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are in the labor force. The rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are 65 years of age and older will lead to a rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are retired. These trends will lead to a rapid increase in the number of people in the world who are in the labor force and in the world who are retired. This will lead to a rapid increase in the world's labor force and in the world's economy.
