

Telegraph Avenue Complete Streets Implementation Plan

PROJECT OVERVIEW

The City of Oakland, in collaboration with the Alameda County Transportation Commission, is working to improve transportation safety and comfort on Telegraph Avenue.

The Telegraph Avenue Complete Streets Implementation Plan will design Telegraph Avenue to be a better street for walking, bicycling, riding transit, and driving between 20th and the Berkeley border, with a focus on the area south of 57th Street. In its current state, Telegraph Avenue has safety challenges for all users, including speeding, a lack of space for bicyclists, inadequately-sized bus stops, difficult pedestrian crossings, and public safety concerns.

A redesign of Telegraph Avenue must improve the safety and accessibility of all modes, make the street more comfortable and enjoyable for walking and bicycling, and balance the needs and convenience of all users. The project will consider not only through-travel but also access to the businesses, restaurants, and gathering spaces that make Telegraph Avenue a great destination.

The Complete Streets Implementation Plan will use an extensive outreach process including surveys, stakeholder interviews, and public meetings to create a design that meets the community's needs. When completed in late 2014, the Plan will provide a long-term design concept for the corridor, as well as a funding and phasing plan with near-term action items that the City can pursue immediately.
